CHAPTER VII THE WEARING OF RELIGIOUS EMBLEMS AT THE FRONT SPREAD OF THE EXAMPLE SET BY IRISH SOLDIERS Nearly every man out here is wearing some sort of Catholic medallion or a rosary that has been given him, and he would rather part with his day's rations or his last cigarette than part with his sacred talisman. --Extract from a letter written from the Front by a non-Catholic private in the Hussars. The wearing of religious emblems by soldiers of the British Army is much talked of by doctors and nurses in military hospitals in France and at home. When wounded soldiers are undressed--be they non-Catholic or Catholic--the discovery is frequently made of medals or scapulars worn around their necks, or sacred badges stitched inside their tunics. It is a psychological phenomenon of much interest for the light it throws upon human...
