The report of the Commission for 1898-1899 says: It will be remembered that the origin of the Commission was largely due to the attempts made by the colleges of New England previous to 1885 to unify college entrance requirements in English. The first steps towards unification of these requirements were taken by the Association of Colleges in New England. Some of the colleges in this Association had become convinced that uniformity was desirable, and sought to secure it. At a meeting of the Association at Trinity College a vote was passed recognizing the desirability of uniformity. At the same college, in December, 1879, representatives of several colleges met and drew up a scheme of requirements in English. These requirements were largely based on the requirements prescribed by Harvard College, and first introduced there in 1874.
