What beginning have we made? Although we have not reached the maximum of recent years, if we fairly consider the circumstances of the year, we may compare it with our Associations infancy, or any of its best years; and the record is one that should give us courage to go forward. Within the memory of the present generation, there has been no period of pecuniary depression so general and severe. Numerous failures in financial affairs have been but an index of a commercial stagnation, widespread and universal, which has at once multiplied the burdens and calls of charity, and abridged the resources of generosity. To many of our churches, as to individuals, it has brought settlement of accounts, bringing home debts too freely contracted in recent years of excited hope and expectation of ever-increasing prosperity. Many of our churches have found the years struggle a severe one; and, while expressing unabated interest in our missionary work, have deemed themselves unable to contribute. Our denomination has been subjected to a trying test of stability: whether, without novel and captivating appeals, we could steadily redeem pledges and carry the burden of missionary work, self-imposed in more prosperous days. A goodly number of societies have contributed, and a fair proportion of these have kept their contributions up to a generous mark. In 1859, forty societies gave $4,000 to our treasury. In this year, one hundred and thirty-three societies have given...
